Team Player - Collaborative	"How do you define a team player? Provide a personal example that illustrates your definition."
OAR Story Answer To me, a good team player is someone who knows his/her role and the responsibility that goes with it. At the same time, a team player is someone who's able to see beyond his/her personal gain for the success of the team and/or task at hand.  I was from the campus community service club and I was part of a committee to organize a fund-raising carwash in my school. I was put in charge of designing the posters and flyers because of my design skills. But just when I was about to complete my designs, I was told that the committee had decided to cancel the carwash in school as one of our members had a personal contact in Esso and they wanted to seize this opportunity to collaborate with Esso to provide carwash services to the public to raise more funds. It was not easy to give up on the designs that I worked hard to prepare for. But I knew I had to support my committee as our ultimate goal was to raise more funds for our beneficiaries. So in the end I helped to design the presentation slides for our pitch to Esso and our project successfully raised over $20, 000.
